

RESEARCH INFORMATION

I kindly invite you to participate in the research study 'Work related wellbeing of employees', which within the doctoral thesis 'A mixed methods examination of precarious employment and its effects on wellbeing' is carried out by Robin Fabrin-Petersen, junior researcher. The research is conducted at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Ljubljana, Slovenia, under the guidance of Valentina Hlebec, professor, and John Allister McGregor, professor.

The purpose of the research is to explore your experience of working life and how it relates to your wellbeing. The answers will be studied in relation to precariousness in employment. In participating in the study, you will be asked to answer a questionnaire about your working and non-working life satisfactions and priorities. The questionnaire will take approximately 15-20 minutes to answer.

Your participation in the research is entirely voluntary, you may refuse to answer certain questions or terminate your participation at any time without consequences, and can request the destruction of the personal data collected.

In accordance with recognized ethical standards of scientific research and the EU General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), Norstat has implemented measures to protect your personal data in the collection and use for its scientific research purposes.

All data will be anonymized before further analysis or data handling. After the data collection is completed, the anonymised data will be safely stored away in the University database.

Participation in the survey does not pose any significant risks to either mental or physical state, and the only cost of the participation will be the time spent.

Except from a small compensation for your time, your participation in the research does not bring any significant benefits other than the knowledge and experience you will gain in the framework of cooperation. In addition to that, your participation will help research on wellbeing of potentially precarious employees.

If you have any additional questions, I can be contacted at email robin.fabrin-petersen@fdv.uni-lj.si.

Best regards,

Robin Fabrin-Petersen
